CSI makes creating student clubs easy

Although more than 200 clubs exist at Truman, new clubs frequently form to meet the diverse interests of students across campus.

In the case of Student Activities Coordinator Bubble K. Carson, who works in the Center for Student Involvement and works to start a club is simple. “They just come into the CSI and ask us to help them get started,” Carson said.

This form states that if the funds of the club are not depleted after one year of inactivity, they become property of the University.
