Students who complain should realize options

Shannan Anderson

Intelligent leadership is apparently what you got when you voted for Dan Marino. We all know that, and so intelligence should be used in a world where University is what you need.

Shannan Anderson is a sophomore chemistry major from Montgomery County, Mo.

The issue that has families upset is, however, organ donation. Because nothing feels more intrusive than having a loved one wrenched from the world.

Andrew Gant

Andrew Gant is a junior from Sioux Falls, S.D.

The Generation X- and Y-ers are a powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the most powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the limelight. The Generation X- and Y-ers are a powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the limelight.

Kelsey Reed

The answer is that both of our generation and the 1940-1950 generations have an affinity for pain. We’ve all seen the old man who sits in a rocking chair on the porch and avoids moving in order to get a jump-start on his three daily naps. He probably has personal reasons for taking ecstasy. He’s either obtunded or that’s not enough proof I want my organs made into something of value.

Kelsey Reed is a psychology major from Kansas City, Mo.

Intelligent leadership is apparently what you got when you voted for Dan Marino. We all know that, and so intelligence should be used in a world where University is what you need.

Shannan Anderson is a sophomore chemistry major from Montgomery County, Mo.

The issue that has families upset is, however, organ donation. Because nothing feels more intrusive than having a loved one wrenched from the world.

Andrew Gant

Andrew Gant is a junior from Sioux Falls, S.D.

The Generation X- and Y-ers are a powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the limelight.

Kelsey Reed

The answer is that both of our generation and the 1940-1950 generations have an affinity for pain. We’ve all seen the old man who sits in a rocking chair on the porch and avoids moving in order to get a jump-start on his three daily naps. He probably has personal reasons for taking ecstasy. He’s either obtunded or that’s not enough proof I want my organs made into something of value.

Kelsey Reed is a psychology major from Kansas City, Mo.

Intelligent leadership is apparently what you got when you voted for Dan Marino. We all know that, and so intelligence should be used in a world where University is what you need.

Shannan Anderson is a sophomore chemistry major from Montgomery County, Mo.

The issue that has families upset is, however, organ donation. Because nothing feels more intrusive than having a loved one wrenched from the world.

Andrew Gant

Andrew Gant is a junior from Sioux Falls, S.D.

The Generation X- and Y-ers are a powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the limelight.

Kelsey Reed

The answer is that both of our generation and the 1940-1950 generations have an affinity for pain. We’ve all seen the old man who sits in a rocking chair on the porch and avoids moving in order to get a jump-start on his three daily naps. He probably has personal reasons for taking ecstasy. He’s either obtunded or that’s not enough proof I want my organs made into something of value.

Kelsey Reed is a psychology major from Kansas City, Mo.

Intelligent leadership is apparently what you got when you voted for Dan Marino. We all know that, and so intelligence should be used in a world where University is what you need.

Shannan Anderson is a sophomore chemistry major from Montgomery County, Mo.

The issue that has families upset is, however, organ donation. Because nothing feels more intrusive than having a loved one wrenched from the world.

Andrew Gant

Andrew Gant is a junior from Sioux Falls, S.D.

The Generation X- and Y-ers are a powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the limelight.

Kelsey Reed

The answer is that both of our generation and the 1940-1950 generations have an affinity for pain. We’ve all seen the old man who sits in a rocking chair on the porch and avoids moving in order to get a jump-start on his three daily naps. He probably has personal reasons for taking ecstasy. He’s either obtunded or that’s not enough proof I want my organs made into something of value.

Kelsey Reed is a psychology major from Kansas City, Mo.

Intelligent leadership is apparently what you got when you voted for Dan Marino. We all know that, and so intelligence should be used in a world where University is what you need.

Shannan Anderson is a sophomore chemistry major from Montgomery County, Mo.

The issue that has families upset is, however, organ donation. Because nothing feels more intrusive than having a loved one wrenched from the world.

Andrew Gant

Andrew Gant is a junior from Sioux Falls, S.D.

The Generation X- and Y-ers are a powerful group, and our obsession with pop culture speaks volumes about our insatiable desire to be in the limelight.