The riots in France, which followed the controversial French law that would address the problems in immigration, will address the future of multiculturalism in Europe.

Farrah Mahlaoui, exchange student from France, said "I hope they will understand that I am not here to disrupt, but to share my culture with you."

"When I speak in English, I feel that I got enough of it to rest. I mean no idea what he was talking about," Patrick said.

The ongoing riots in France are frustrated because the native people feel that they are being mistreated in other countries.

"I really wish there were more understanding and knowledge about the society of the U.S. from northern countries in Africa," Rodríguez de la Vega said. "They are trying so hard to create a society that is based on equality, and they are not sure how to do it."
