Seven students participate in National Art Competition at University Art Gallery

Lauren Miller
Staff Reporter

Diversity is the name of the game at the 16th Annual National Art Competition at Truman.

Located in the University Art Gallery, contemporary prints, paintings and photography are some examples of the media featured.

Not only are the types of art diverse, but so are the artists. The winners come from places such as Boston, Denver, Chicago, St. Louis, South Bend, Ind., and Long Island, N.Y., said senior Paul Scruggs, who has been working in the gallery for three years.

"The appeal of this show is really the variety of artists thatEntrance to the gallery is free and open to everyone. The gallery is open Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Saturday and Sunday from noon to 4 p.m.

Lauren Miller
Staff Reporter

Diversity is the name of the game at the 16th Annual National Art Competition at Truman.

Located in the University Art Gallery, contemporary prints, paintings and photography are some examples of the media featured.

Not only are the types of art diverse, but so are the artists. The winners come from places such as Boston, Denver, Chicago, St. Louis, South Bend, Ind., and Long Island, N.Y., said senior Paul Scruggs, who has been working in the gallery for three years.

"The appeal of this show is really the variety of artists that are featured," Scruggs said. "We have artists from all over the country, and the artwork is diverse, both in terms of media and style." The show is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Aaron Fine, associate professor of art and art gallery director, agreed that bringing in several artists is important.

"This type of show is a daily common thing for schools to do," Fine said. "It is important to have a diverse body of work, which is what these people do for a living." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art.

Shannon Fitzgerald, chief curator of the Contemporary Art Museum in St. Louis, chose the artists for this year's competition. Fine said that Fitzgerald judged about 100 artists' submitted slides, and then chose seven artists to showcase their artwork. The seven winners are Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Fine, who chose Fitzgerald as juror, said having a professional examine an artist's body of work is part of the appeal for artists to enter the competition.

"I think it is important to note that the artists were chosen because their art fits the juror's ideas and artistic requirements," Fine said. "Fitzgerald was the reason I decided to enter the competition, and I am excited that my artwork was chosen." Fine said that winning was not necessarily a good word for being chosen, but instead, he said that being chosen is important to the artists.

"It was, and is, a great opportunity to have her see my work," Fine said. "I am really excited for this year's exhibit." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art. The gallery is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Photo by Phil Jarrett/Designed by Lindsay Koski/Index

Design compiled from artwork by Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Artists draw attention

Seven students participate in National Art Competition at University Art Gallery

Lauren Miller
Staff Reporter

Diversity is the name of the game at the 16th Annual National Art Competition at Truman.

Located in the University Art Gallery, contemporary prints, paintings and photography are some examples of the media featured.

Not only are the types of art diverse, but so are the artists. The winners come from places such as Boston, Denver, Chicago, St. Louis, South Bend, Ind., and Long Island, N.Y., said senior Paul Scruggs, who has been working in the gallery for three years.

"The appeal of this show is really the variety of artists that are featured," Scruggs said. "We have artists from all over the country, and the artwork is diverse, both in terms of media and style." The show is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Aaron Fine, associate professor of art and art gallery director, agreed that bringing in several artists is important.

"This type of show is a daily common thing for schools to do," Fine said. "It is important to have a diverse body of work, which is what these people do for a living." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art.

Shannon Fitzgerald, chief curator of the Contemporary Art Museum in St. Louis, chose the artists for this year's competition. Fine said that Fitzgerald judged about 100 artists' submitted slides, and then chose seven artists to showcase their artwork. The seven winners are Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Fine, who chose Fitzgerald as juror, said having a professional examine an artist's body of work is part of the appeal for artists to enter the competition.

"I think it is important to note that the artists were chosen because their art fits the juror's ideas and artistic requirements," Fine said. "Fitzgerald was the reason I decided to enter the competition, and I am excited that my artwork was chosen." Fine said that winning was not necessarily a good word for being chosen, but instead, he said that being chosen is important to the artists.

"It was, and is, a great opportunity to have her see my work," Fine said. "I am really excited for this year's exhibit." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art. The gallery is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Photo by Phil Jarrett/Designed by Lindsay Koski/Index

Design compiled from artwork by Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Artists draw attention

Seven students participate in National Art Competition at University Art Gallery

Lauren Miller
Staff Reporter

Diversity is the name of the game at the 16th Annual National Art Competition at Truman.

Located in the University Art Gallery, contemporary prints, paintings and photography are some examples of the media featured.

Not only are the types of art diverse, but so are the artists. The winners come from places such as Boston, Denver, Chicago, St. Louis, South Bend, Ind., and Long Island, N.Y., said senior Paul Scruggs, who has been working in the gallery for three years.

"The appeal of this show is really the variety of artists that are featured," Scruggs said. "We have artists from all over the country, and the artwork is diverse, both in terms of media and style." The show is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Aaron Fine, associate professor of art and art gallery director, agreed that bringing in several artists is important.

"This type of show is a daily common thing for schools to do," Fine said. "It is important to have a diverse body of work, which is what these people do for a living." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art.

Shannon Fitzgerald, chief curator of the Contemporary Art Museum in St. Louis, chose the artists for this year's competition. Fine said that Fitzgerald judged about 100 artists' submitted slides, and then chose seven artists to showcase their artwork. The seven winners are Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Fine, who chose Fitzgerald as juror, said having a professional examine an artist's body of work is part of the appeal for artists to enter the competition.

"I think it is important to note that the artists were chosen because their art fits the juror's ideas and artistic requirements," Fine said. "Fitzgerald was the reason I decided to enter the competition, and I am excited that my artwork was chosen." Fine said that winning was not necessarily a good word for being chosen, but instead, he said that being chosen is important to the artists.

"It was, and is, a great opportunity to have her see my work," Fine said. "I am really excited for this year's exhibit." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art. The gallery is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Photo by Phil Jarrett/Designed by Lindsay Koski/Index

Design compiled from artwork by Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Artists draw attention

Seven students participate in National Art Competition at University Art Gallery

Lauren Miller
Staff Reporter

Diversity is the name of the game at the 16th Annual National Art Competition at Truman.

Located in the University Art Gallery, contemporary prints, paintings and photography are some examples of the media featured.

Not only are the types of art diverse, but so are the artists. The winners come from places such as Boston, Denver, Chicago, St. Louis, South Bend, Ind., and Long Island, N.Y., said senior Paul Scruggs, who has been working in the gallery for three years.

"The appeal of this show is really the variety of artists that are featured," Scruggs said. "We have artists from all over the country, and the artwork is diverse, both in terms of media and style." The show is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Aaron Fine, associate professor of art and art gallery director, agreed that bringing in several artists is important.

"This type of show is a daily common thing for schools to do," Fine said. "It is important to have a diverse body of work, which is what these people do for a living." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art.

Shannon Fitzgerald, chief curator of the Contemporary Art Museum in St. Louis, chose the artists for this year's competition. Fine said that Fitzgerald judged about 100 artists' submitted slides, and then chose seven artists to showcase their artwork. The seven winners are Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.

Fine, who chose Fitzgerald as juror, said having a professional examine an artist's body of work is part of the appeal for artists to enter the competition.

"I think it is important to note that the artists were chosen because their art fits the juror's ideas and artistic requirements," Fine said. "Fitzgerald was the reason I decided to enter the competition, and I am excited that my artwork was chosen." Fine said that winning was not necessarily a good word for being chosen, but instead, he said that being chosen is important to the artists.

"It was, and is, a great opportunity to have her see my work," Fine said. "I am really excited for this year's exhibit." Fine said that the gallery is important to the University, and that it helps to bring in new and more contemporary art. The gallery is open to the public and is free to attend. It features contemporary prints, paintings and photography, and is open to students, faculty and staff. The show runs through April 6, and is located in the University Art Gallery, located in Ophelia Parrish.

Photo by Phil Jarrett/Designed by Lindsay Koski/Index

Design compiled from artwork by Arielle Sandler, Melinda Laz, Ken Konchel, Susan Moore, Timothy Hutchings, Walter Kopec and David Peterson.