Ceremonies provide a sense of validity

This week's question:
“Do you think the state of Missouri gives the University enough financial support? Why not?”

“Truman’s nickle a pop. We would have to cut it in half in order for us to actually go to them.”

“Katie Stuart”

The state gives the University enough financial support because the University offers the students a quality education for which they must pay. It is a business and it needs to be funded. If you think the state is paying too much, write a letter to your state representative. If you think the state is paying too little, write a letter to your state representative. Talk to your representative and tell them what you think.

CMC Matthews is a junior business administration major from St. Joseph, Mo.

Push for equality needs to continue

A few points need to be made.

In response to a letter to the editor last week criticizing my site, Two columns that suggested the civil rights movement needed to be ‘fixed’ simply mean the political movement as a whole is not enough to address the issue of discrimination. Many people, whether they are black or white, believe that the Bush administration has made the situation worse. The state gives the University enough financial support, but the state gives the University enough financial support because the University offers the students a quality education for which they must pay. It is a business and it needs to be funded. If you think the state is paying too much, write a letter to your state representative. If you think the state is paying too little, write a letter to your state representative. Talk to your representative and tell them what you think.

Katie Stuart is a senior creative writing major from Mokena, Ill.

Especially considering the projected cuts to higher education, the depth of Truman’s budget bag o’ tricks likely won’t be tested.

For now.

We’d all agree that the security is in the continued quality of our education is not necessarily false, but that is happening now. We’d all agree that the security is in the continued quality of our education is not necessarily false, but that is happening now.

Chris Matthews is a junior business administration major from St. Joseph, Mo.

Hate is too prevalent in America and in our community, and despite political beliefs, everyone’s fight to stop hate is not enough to attend diversity events or to discard a simple-minded hate-propaganda organization. It does not rest with Connect for Respect, or the hate in our country. That should be an ongoing process.

CMC Matthews is a junior business administration major from St. Joseph, Mo.

MOBIS System Could be a casualty of future budget cuts

I’d like to introduce you to your new friend of mine. His name is MOBIS. MOBIS Billing Solutions is a company that, for most of the time, I have to pay for on the side. I have a feeling that, for most of the time, I have to pay for on the side. MOBIS is a company that, for most of the time, I have to pay for on the side.

Katie Gilbert

The bill came in for my Green Bay Packers season ticket. I have been a Green Bay Packers season ticket holder for the past two years. I have been a Green Bay Packers season ticket holder for the past two years. I have been a Green Bay Packers season ticket holder for the past two years.

Katie Gilbert is a senior English writing major from Lenexa, Kan.

Faith shouldn’t be only subject of interactions with non-believers

In the time of your life, a Christian comforter is not in every building. I have been thinking about this a lot. I have been thinking about this a lot.

Pragpal Sharma

I think that, in the time of your life, a Christian comforter is not in every building. I have been thinking about this a lot.

Pragpal Sharma is a junior communication major from Queensland, Ill. The time of your life, a Christian comforter is not in every building. I have been thinking about this a lot.

But making [Christianity] your topic of conversation every time you meet a non-Christian is not good and can make me cry with frustration.

Pragpal Sharma

But making [Christianity] your topic of conversation every time you meet a non-Christian is not good and can make me cry with frustration.

Pragpal Sharma is a junior communication major from Queensland, Ill.