Nahrel Naim said the goal was to produce something that was re-leared. She said she received her master’s degree in music education at the University of Missouri in 2003, planning to be a high school music teacher. She is a wife, a stepmother, and a soprano for the St. Louis Symphony Chorus and received her bachelor’s degree in vocal performance at Missouri State University in Springfield in 2000.

"I’m not saying it as a ca-ronum," she said. "The St. Louis Symphony Chorus is the epitome of grace and dignity, very grace, and I would stay with them for the formidable sta-

Shears said he was inspired by the song to a professional level. He said, "I love the song because it talks about the love for your country, you’re fighting for your country, you’re sacrificing. Everybody has what it takes to do that."

Chase was sure from the beginning that she had a gift. She said she received her master’s degree in vocal music education in 2005, planning to be a high school music teacher. She is a wife, a stepmother, and a soprano for the St. Louis Symphony Chorus and received her bachelor’s degree in vocal performance at Missouri State University in Springfield in 2000.

"I’m not saying it as a ca-
ronum," she said. "The St. Louis Symphony Chorus is the epitome of grace and dignity, very grace, and I would stay with them for the formidable sta-

It’s a local person

(wrote the song)

in memory of a local person, That’s why it’s dead at a hit!

Helene Adams

(940) 951-0043

"I’m not saying it as a ca-
ronum," she said. "The St. Louis Symphony Chorus is the epitome of grace and dignity, very grace, and I would stay with them for the formidable sta-

Shears said he was inspired by the song to a professional level. He said, "I love the song because it talks about the love for your country, you’re fighting for your country, you’re sacrificing. Everybody has what it takes to do that."

Chase was sure from the beginning that she had a gift. She said she received her master’s degree in vocal music education in 2005, planning to be a high school music teacher. She is a wife, a stepmother, and a soprano for the St. Louis Symphony Chorus and received her bachelor’s degree in vocal performance at Missouri State University in Springfield in 2000.

"I’m not saying it as a ca-
ronum," she said. "The St. Louis Symphony Chorus is the epitome of grace and dignity, very grace, and I would stay with them for the formidable sta-

Shears said he was inspired by the song to a professional level. He said, "I love the song because it talks about the love for your country, you’re fighting for your country, you’re sacrificing. Everybody has what it takes to do that."

Chase was sure from the beginning that she had a gift. She said she received her master’s degree in vocal music education in 2005, planning to be a high school music teacher. She is a wife, a stepmother, and a soprano for the St. Louis Symphony Chorus and received her bachelor’s degree in vocal performance at Missouri State University in Springfield in 2000.

"I’m not saying it as a ca-
ronum," she said. "The St. Louis Symphony Chorus is the epitome of grace and dignity, very grace, and I would stay with them for the formidable sta-

Shears said he was inspired by the song to a professional level. He said, "I love the song because it talks about the love for your country, you’re fighting for your country, you’re sacrificing. Everybody has what it takes to do that."

Chase was sure from the beginning that she had a gift. She said she received her master’s degree in vocal music education in 2005, planning to be a high school music teacher. She is a wife, a stepmother, and a soprano for the St. Louis Symphony Chorus and received her bachelor’s degree in vocal performance at Missouri State University in Springfield in 2000.