Liberty means more than supporting war effort

We are American citizens. We have the right to openly oppose a government we feel is against the wishes of the people. Thus, we are able to pursue our own happiness and the happiness of others to experience that same liberty means more than supporting war effort.

Shaman Anderson

Close encounters of nudists reveals even they have inhibitions

When he told me it had to be asked, the conversation came to a screeching halt. I had thought we were on the brink of a mutual understanding, of going on a date, of the possibility of even having sex. Then he asked me to answer a question.

Apparently when you're in college, many, many nude beaches are within driving distance of the campus. For someone who had just returned from a trip to Scotland, it was an interesting thought. My degrees of freedom were expanding. That's what college was all about. Getting to know yourself, falling in love, even losing your virginity.

I didn't like the question he asked. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.

I didn't like the question he asked. I didn't like the way he asked it. It made me feel like I was back in high school, answering questions about my period. It was about personal things, and the way he asked the question was even more so. In high school, we didn't have to worry about things like this. We were supposed to be living our lives, not answering questions about them.