Apathy allows students to get more out of college experience

Brenna McMchnitt

There's no saying my mother never told me, "Eat, drink, and be merry, because tomorrow you may not have the chance." However, I'm inclined to say that many Truman students have decided to ignore the advice, and many are missing out on the fun they should be having. I'm not saying that we are all lazy, but very often, I find myself in a group of students just sitting around the dorm room playing video games or watching movies when we should probably be doing something else to help us get through the next class.

Recently, about 18 of my friends and I had a discussion about what we thought were some of the biggest pet peeves about our college. After listening to all of our concerns, I came to the conclusion that the biggest pet peeve of all was the lack of dedication to an education. Many people are content with simply getting by and not putting in the effort necessary to get the best education possible.

I think that many students are not fully aware of the opportunities they have in college. There are so many resources available to students, but many of them choose to ignore them. The best way to get involved is to start by signing up for the Student Center events. The Student Center is a great place to meet new people and learn about different opportunities on campus.

I think that many students are missing out on the fun they could be having by not getting involved on campus. There are so many organizations and clubs that students can join, and many of them are dedicated to helping students get involved and make the most of their college experience.
