Don't trust the media, and maybe, not the menus, either. After winning the Super Bowl in 2001 and then losing the Super Bowl in 2002, the Pittsburgh Steelers, while barely getting by in the early rounds of the playoffs, suddenly become "the team to beat." That's right. Don't trust the media. We haven't seen them fail at all. Some might even say they are job-aholic. They never get it wrong. But as much as it may seem that the media are right, don't believe them. The media are not infallible. They are a variety of major news media, collaborating in their efforts to portray events. For example, in the case of a Super Bowl, the media will call it a "Super Bowl" even when it isn't a super Bowl. The media will call it "Super Bowl" even when it isn't a Super Bowl. The media will call it "Super Bowl" even when it isn't a Super Bowl. The media will call it "Super Bowl" even when it isn't a Super Bowl.

Super Bowl statistics show need for policy change

Smoking ban should be an issue of property rights

Editor: I often think about how many of our problems are caused by how we tend to be led around by the professional media. This week, the media have been trumpeting the potential for a "smoking ban" in Missouri. It's certainly a hot issue in our state, and it has been a topic of conversation in our community. But when we hear about these potential smoking bans, we need to think about what the true nature of the issue is. We need to think about whether a "smoking ban" is a matter of property rights, or whether it's a matter of public health. We need to think about whether we should allow smokers to smoke in public, or whether we should ban smoking altogether. We need to think about whether we should allow smokers to smoke in public, or whether we should ban smoking altogether.
