Caucusers show conviction for choice candidates

By HEATHER TURNER

Many people wonder about Iowa's status as a key state in the long process of presidential campaigns. At first glance, the caucuses are all about farmers and the issues that most concern them. On the national level, however, the process is perhaps just beginning.

Several Iowa residents found their way to the caucuses on Tuesday night to cast their votes on many issues. Among them was a student from the University of Iowa – and that there were interfaces of students who came to other areas of Iowa City – home of the University of Iowa, as well as students from the United States, as well as students from the University of Iowa.

The students were given free lodging throughout the state in “Constitution Day” events, where they could make phone calls to their precincts to spread the word.
