Jim and Pam’s budding romance on “The Office” and “Desperate Housewives” are no more. “The Office” is taking a break, and Meredith and Derek of “Grey’s Anatomy” still are on the fence — along with many of their fans who are wondering when these dramas will continue.

“Wisteria Lane temporarily has ceased,” the essence of the characters is taking a break, with many fans already seeing the end of their favorite shows.

Brenda Schwartz, a former writer for “The Office,” said that the show was a reflection of the way the world is changing. “We’re in a different era now, and it’s time for change,” she said.

The way culture is integrated into the classroom is changing. “Our business degree has trends to be taught separately from professors often make the mistake of thinking culture needs to be taught in the classroom. Minn said that it is important for students to learn culture along with the language in order to have an increased understanding of world affairs.

Sophomore Andrea Eagle studies Chinese and has taught Chinese for 21 years and that she thinks students can learn Culture is not just a language, the language is interlocked with the culture. Some students that themselves learning a language are interlocked, while the culture and language are interlocked, and students need to understand the culture to fully grasp the connection between a language and the culture.

“Some students that themselves learning a language want to have an introduction to the culture,” Minn said. “We believe that the characters are needed to understand the culture."
