When Sophomore Theresa and Joan Williams came home from work, they noticed the time change had taken effect. They turned on the television to see if the news had mentioned anything about it. "We just did it [by accident]," Theresa said.

The family decided to hold a family meeting to discuss the reasons behind birth order and personality. Theresa said, "They're total suck-ups who want to go to the same college." She added that she and her sister are the middle child and the youngest child, respectively. "I think of it like a syndrome," he said. "It's trying to unravel the picture of that individual, I'm thinking whatever doesn't exist," he said.

Co-Director of Admission Melody Hatala said the study of birth order might determine a person's traits. "Birth order might determine your personality," Hatala said. "It's trying to unravel the picture of that individual, I'm thinking whatever doesn't exist," he said. "I think of it like a syndrome," he said.

"Birth order is not destiny," Christopher Maglio said. "It's trying to unravel the picture of that individual, I'm thinking whatever doesn't exist," he said. "I think of it like a syndrome," he said.

Time Warped

Adding the entire month of April to daylight-saving time is an hour earlier than planned. But at least I have a good excuse. ... I didn't even realize daylight-saving time was coming up or that there had been a change. ... It's just too generic to say whatever doesn't exist," he said. "I think of it like a syndrome," he said.
