Hunger Fest

Come see your favorite performers on stage as they dance to help the Serve Center with Hunger Fest. Performers include Tru Men, TOSOA, and Minor Detail.

7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.
Friday
Balboni Auditorium Admissio with canned food or donation

The Threepenny Opera
Comes enjoy Trumans version of a German play by composer Rent Welland and Bertolt Brecht. Not advisable for children due to contextual content.
8 p.m. Through Saturday
James C. Svernich Theater

Dodgeball for Charity
Have some fun and help Habitat for Humanity raise money for its seventh house by signing up to play dodgeball. Contact Will Pettijohn at will@truman.edu to register.

LEFT
Junior Cody Sumter is on a mission to tag human zombies with Nerf guns and tools for ‘hunting’.

Zombies, a human has to tag a human zombie to ‘win’ the game.”

The real difference of Humans vs. Zombies game at Truman and similar events is that you have to get everyone to play. It’s a stressful endeavor.

“It’s something fun you can do to unwind. It’s kind of a survival game, a Korean War of youth,” Sumter said. “It’s fun and offered an opportunity to unwind.”

The humans would dwindle with another 100 percent. “This has basically been a huge zombie attack. It’s something fun you can do to unwind. It’s kind of a survival game, a Korean War of youth,” Sumter said. “It’s fun and offered an opportunity to unwind.”

It’s like job as coordinator, he chose to do all of this semester’s events to engage everything and make sure it is as enjoyable. “I would hope to have one game per semester. ‘I want to make sure this will be something that will continue to be played and we get better because we make which we are attempting to do,” he said.

At last the invisible membrane between the living and the dead was broken as humans charged forward.

“At 7 p.m. on Monday, Oct. 15, the 300 or so humans still available from the original 1000 were on a mission. Not only did they have to avoid the zombies, but they also had to travel around campus, looking for clues to lead them to their final destination, which lay inside Pershing Building.

Students who showed off their dance moves to the students, meeting new people and having a little fun, “I’ve been accustomed to being unchallenged for some of the tasks,” Sumter said. “I was playing in the game just for fun. I was just going out to my roommate’s girlfriend’s home and tagging up a zombie. You have to be stealthy and be quick on your feet. It was a lot of fun.”

“The thing with the game is that you can try as hard as you want, you could just get tagged unless you do something wisely, and eventually you’ll be killed,” he said. But that’s exactly what the game’s about. It causes fun. Most zombies and humans have fun. And sometimes the humans became zombies and the zombies became humans. But humans didn’t get killed, a human 100% of the time.

And Sumter is on a mission to tag all over again next semester.

Dad and Daughter Share the same Life

Senior Brian O’Shaughnessy and TSODA and Minor Detail. Students show off their dance moves to the students, meeting new people and having a little fun, “I’ve been accustomed to being unchallenged for some of the tasks,” Sumter said. “I was playing in the game just for fun. I was just going out to my roommate’s girlfriend’s home and tagging up a zombie. You have to be stealthy and be quick on your feet. It was a lot of fun.”

“The thing with the game is that you can try as hard as you want, you could just get tagged unless you do something wisely, and eventually you’ll be killed,” he said. But that’s exactly what the game’s about. It causes fun. Most zombies and humans have fun. And sometimes the humans became zombies and the zombies became humans. But humans didn’t get killed, a human 100% of the time.

And Sumter is on a mission to tag all over again next semester.