For those seeking all the hands-on experience they can get, this company has the solution.

Opportunities abound for Truman students to take part in research, and scores of different fields of study... and many of those skills they might be learning in class.

"I'm really excited to get those experiences," said Abram. "It was just kind of a pay-as-you-go thing, you know... It has been a great experience."

He said that he had heard about and was interested in the internship project the spring before his junior year and subsequently asked his professor of music, Brian Jones, professor of music, about the opportunity. "I thought, hey, my whole life, and... you can't teach a whole technique to one interaction that individual provides. It is far more likely that repeated administrations of the same test or questionnaires...

Kraft Foods offers more grazie to students seeking job experience

University students interested in at Kraft Foods, Inc., have the opportunity to seek jobs as either summer interns or as university students intern.

"Junior Karen Abram is one of five Truman students who have been working an internships this summer at Kraft Foods, Inc., on the faculty of the company’s Honeybee Farm in Kansas City, Mo.

"I'm hoping to stay with Kraft Foods after I graduate," said Abram. "It was a very unorthodox experience, so you never really know what's going to happen."

"I'm looking forward to it," said Abram. "I'm looking forward to seeing how the company operates."

For Abram, the experience at Kraft Foods is a chance to "jump off into something different." "I want to do something else," she said. "I have no idea what I want to do in life, but this is something that I have been interested in."
