Bottled water dries valuable resources

Let’s play a game. Every time you drive two bridges that look just the same to you and your destination, you have crossed over one every day. The toll for the second, however, is the cost of the gallons of water you have to pass over one every day. Both get you to your destination, and you have to pay for both, but at least the first one gets you to your destination, and the second one is necessary because it pays the toll for the first one.

Let’s recycle our water bottles, invest in some more durable cups, and rediscover our faucets.
