Patriotism reveals greatness of America through citizen participation.

The presence of citizens is a source of strength and progress. In one area or another we can see the power of our country, which can be put to work for the people. Patriotism is not an invention or something that can be used to manipulate people. It is something that they believe in and that they see as a necessity.

Yes, men and women formed this country because they recognized that a liberty to be free is a basic human right. They are among the highest ideals of humanity — ideas that sometimes require personal sacrifice, active decisions and straightforward actions.

The people of the United States have a higher standard for what is right and wrong. They are willing to risk their lives and stand up for what they believe in.

It is not surprising that humanity has been described as a life that is worth living. Some choose the path of peace, while others choose the path of war. It is a choice that each person must make for themselves.

It is also important to recognize that the rights of women and minorities have been fought for and won. It is a struggle that continues today.

In conclusion, patriotism is a way of life that is worth living. It is a way to live that is worth passing on to future generations. It is a way to live that is worth fighting for.

day they pay — are doing their job, and that is what we should be supporting. Every student has a vote in the future of the university, and every student has a vote in the future of their own success. If you want to see change, don’t just complain about it. Do something about it. Vote. Participate. Be part of the solution, not the problem.
