The Truman Bulls need a turnaround. After a strong spring season, with a 6-2 record, the young team is now facing a challenge.

With the men and women both set to compete, this could be a crucial season. The team has the opportunity to perform well and build for the future.

As for the men, they look to improve upon the competition from last year. Sexton described as a scrappy and challenging season.

The fall season is really about developing players, developing players, developing players, as Sexton said.

There are indications that the team is coming together, and the Bulls will be looking to improve on their spring season.
