Schultz: Construction remains on schedule

BY JULIA HANSEN
Staff Reporter

Mike Avery works on a construction project in the SUB. Renovations to the building are destined to be finished one semester ahead of schedule.

Mike Avery works on a construction project in the SUB. Renovations to the building are destined to be finished one semester ahead of schedule.

BY JULIA HANSEN
Staff Reporter

On July 16, Information Technology Services implemented a free-of-charge emergency notification system through text messages.

“Text messaging is a very reliable way to get information to folks who are interested in it,” reported Mike Avery, director of administrative computing.

Text messages are now a new way to keep students safe.

Incidents that qualify as emergencies include criminal activity or public health threats, according to the Emergency Notification Network.

“Text messaging is a very reliable way to get information to folks who are interested in it,” reported Mike Avery, director of administrative computing.

Text messages are now a new way to keep students safe.

Incidents that qualify as emergencies include criminal activity or public health threats, according to the Emergency Notification Network.

“Text messaging is a very reliable way to get information to folks who are interested in it,” reported Mike Avery, director of administrative computing.

Text messages are now a new way to keep students safe.

Incidents that qualify as emergencies include criminal activity or public health threats, according to the Emergency Notification Network.

“Text messaging is a very reliable way to get information to folks who are interested in it,” reported Mike Avery, director of administrative computing.

Text messages are now a new way to keep students safe.

Incidents that qualify as emergencies include criminal activity or public health threats, according to the Emergency Notification Network.