Concealed weapon law under Senate review

BY AMANDA GOESER Staff Reporter

The Missouri Senate committee is looking at a bill that, if made law, would allow concealed weapons on college campuses -- despite school administration opposition.

Sen. Brian Kuhlman, R-Midway, said SB 401-EGF was presented to the committee because he believes it would give the university the ability to continue enforcing a weapons ban if a concealed weapon was found. Kuhlman said that in 2005 when the first concealed carry law was established, “We had to do a lot of these things to get it past.” Kuhlman said he believes the bill had absolutely no problems — but he said, “It’s not bad time, and it’s actually helped protect some people’s lives.”

Kuhlman said Missouri is the only state of 58 that allows concealed weapons on Texas and California campuses. Munzlinger said he has introduced similar bills, and he thinks that it is related to the police community’s willingness to support the bill. Munzlinger said if the law was established in 2005, it should be a law passed on in 2009.

The whole bill goes back to the fundamental right of self-protection. Munzlinger said. Munzlinger said the bills have been common sense that college students on campus would be having to face carrying a firearm. Munzlinger said these students —

ASHCROFT'S ARREST STANDARDS CONTROVERSY

Mayor Mayo Rowe was reelected at last for the second year. Rowe was elected to his fifth term on March 17. After all teams were voted into the FAC slate for fall funding, the FAC Office announced that the team had “not explored alternative sources of funding or FAC funds.”

This year’s JujiTSU treasurer, Kukash, said the team had “not explored alternative sources of funding or FAC funds,” that the team had been “neglected consistently funding the old FAC slate.”

JujiTSU, the men’s ultimate frisbee team, appeals FAC’s slate for no fall funding

BY AMANDA GOESER Staff Reporter

JujiTSU players and supporters packed the Student Union meeting room Monday to appeal funding from the Faculty Allotment Council for the 2009-10 season.

The team’s ultimate focus this year is improving its record and getting ready for the fall season.

In order to receive funding for the next season, the team must present its proposal to the FAC office before April 20 in order to receive funding for the fall season.

Each year, the FAC office evaluates the team’s proposal for the fall season.

This year’s JujiTSU treasurer, Kukash, said the team had “not explored alternative sources of funding or FAC funds.”

Amanda Gray, who was voted in as treasurer, said the team had “not explored alternative sources of funding or FAC funds.”
