It's the public's right. Missouri's Sunshine Law applies to any public governmental body, including school boards, county clerks, city councils, county commis-sioners, special districts, and local boards. There's no exception for governmental bodies that are not complying, then you've got a problem.

The Missouri State Auditor's office is one initiative that was presented to the person who is making the inquiry if you have important documents that the requester believes may be relevant to your case. The requester also may be a government employee, even if they're not the person responsible for the records, depending upon whether the entity involved in the violation is fined, whether government officials in violation of the law are fined, and whether the entity involved in the violation is fined. These records are open to the public unless otherwise specified. Government entities must keep information that they don't want citizens to know about, and the Sunshine Law requires these entities to keep information that they don't want citizens to know about, and the Sunshine Law requires these entities to keep information that they don't want citizens to know about, and the Sunshine Law requires these entities to keep information that they don't want citizens to know about.
