Truman students deserve better health care options

Jean Kaul

Unfortunately, I didn't have health insurance during my first year. I didn't really think about it, but after reading The Scripture of Health Care Reform, I realized why we need better health care options.

As a political science major, I'm in a unique position to discuss the importance of health care options at Truman. My field of study is such a polarizing one. In a nationwide health care debate, different themes arise. People bundle up, bring a cooler and load up the car to kick off Black Friday. We camp in front of stores, only to be disappointed in the hours before the store opens. People are trying to get the best deals on the market, and to grab the limited edition objects before anyone else. I know I would love nothing more than to avoid such a situation, but without the proper health care, that's exactly what would happen.

I was born with a full-body rash and was frequently taken to the emergency room. I was the only student in my college who was diagnosed with a severe skin condition, but there were more students who had a similar story. I believe that everyone has the right to quality health care. Everyone should have health insurance, but I suspect that many of you don't.

I was exposing the issue to the emergency room and a medical student was surprised by what I was saying. I knew that I had a full-body rash, but I was also recognizing that there were other students who had similar problems. I realized that I had been taking an for granted, but I knew that I needed to get health care.

The lessons Kirkville medical students were teaching me:

Kelsey Landhuis

Recently, I've been learning about the history of medicine and I've been reading about how medical students were teaching me about the importance of health care options.

Truman, the health center is full of hard working, caring and dedicated individuals who work hard to make the health center what it is today. I believe that the health care system is a vital part of our society and it's important that everyone has access to it. It's not just a matter of having health insurance, but also having the ability to access health care options.

If you're looking for a health care option, I would recommend looking into the health care system provided by Truman. It's a good resource for information about health care options.

Students require stress relief

Andrew Kandiger

On Monday, Nov. 24, Obama introduced his national security team. What is Sally Ratcliffe’s reaction to this? "I think it’s great!" Obama’s appointment of Sally Ratcliffe to the post of National Security Advisor is a significant step forward in terms of diversity and representation. Sally Ratcliffe is a career foreign service officer who has served in various capacities across the globe.

Sally Ratcliffe is a career foreign service officer who has served in various capacities across the globe. She has held a number of high-level positions, including Ambassador to the United Kingdom and Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in London. Sally Ratcliffe has extensive experience in diplomacy and her appointment as National Security Advisor is a testament to her expertise in national security and foreign policy.

I spoke with Sally Ratcliffe about her new position and her thoughts on the current state of affairs. She said that she is excited to work with the new administration and that she is looking forward to making a positive impact on national security policy.

I asked her about her thoughts on the impending deadline for the new administration and she said that she is confident that the team will be able to work together effectively to address the challenges facing the country. She also said that she is looking forward to working with the new administration and that she is excited to see what the future holds.

I think that Sally Ratcliffe’s appointment as National Security Advisor is a great step forward in terms of diversity and representation. Her appointment is a testament to the importance of having a diverse and inclusive team in national security policy. I think that Sally Ratcliffe will be an asset to the new administration and that she will be able to make a positive impact on national security policy.