It only took a few plays for Ballinger coach Alan Utley to become interested. Vicko was a raw recruit joining a recruiting effort with two players from a high school in New Braunfels, Texas, against which Truman had seemed to show little interest.

Vicko had shown up the previous weekend during a football camp. Utley was interested to see what Vicko could do.

Vicko made a second impression on Utley in December, and McKinnon made an official visit to Truman in January before making his final decision to become a Bulldog last week.

McKinnon joined a second member of the football staff, head coach Shannon Carrier for signing their letters of intent. McKinnon said that practicing next to each other was a good experience. You screwed the pooch on this one vote, Wollmering said.

McKinnon was a junior when he played quarterback for his high school varsity team. The team was a member of the TAPPS Class AA, a private school league in Texas. The league stopped sponsoring football after the 2009 season.

And they don’t have a plan to add volleyball yet, with a plan to add volleyball by 2012-13. Current has a plan to add volleyball by 2012-13 and women’s basketball to the MIAA school.
