A reputation of Magic the Gathering being played on campus is being spread throughout the University. A small group of regular players carry on their love of the game right throughout the year.

As in 2007, where 145 people showed up to the Multiverse in 1998. Fellow student and SGA member Alex-Andersson was one of the players.

Eckert said that he has traveled across the United States and Canada to play Magic. He has attended tournaments in more than 20 countries. He has won a number of titles, including the World Magic Championship in 1999.

The longest game I ever played was 15 hours long, Eckert said. He has played games of Magic that lasted over 24 hours. He has played games with more than 50 players, and he has won tournaments with more than 200 players.

The game of Magic is played with cards, which are divided into different colors. Each color represents a different type of mana, which is a resource used to cast spells. The colors are red, green, blue, black, and white.

The game itself is a combination of strategy and luck. Players must make choices in order to gain advantages over their opponents.

Eckert said that he enjoys playing Magic because it is a challenging and competitive game. He also enjoys the social aspect of playing with friends and other players.

Eckert's advice for those who want to learn Magic is to start with the basics and work your way up. He recommends playing with other players and participating in local tournaments.

Eckert said that he is proud of the Magic community at Truman State University. He is excited to see how the game will continue to grow in the future.
