Students and local residents prepare to travel for a chance to witness history

BY MELISSA KEELER
staff writer

With a week and a half of the presidential inauguration left, a select few ticket holders are preparing to witness the event. D.C. Truman's own Jill Graves, Associate Director of Recruitment, is preparing to witness the inauguration. "The event. The 2009 Presidential Inauguration will be next Monday, Jan. 20, 2009 on the West Front of the Capitol Building in Washington, D.C.," said Graves.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.

Graves worked for the campaign for four years and was prepared to witness the inauguration with more than 100 people. On Inauguration Day, her campaign work will be over, and she will be one of those people who have taken the time to cross the country to see the President.

"It's going to be an amazing experience," she said. "It's just going to be a part of the history, and I'm going to be a part of the history.