Joya provides stability to point guard position

BY BRIENT FOSTER

Joya's leadership at point guard was evident during the Bulldogs' loss to Missouri State this season. Joya's steady play at point guard helped the team stay in the game, but she also had four steals and four assists, including one in overtime which helped lead the Bulldogs to victory.

Joya's improvements this season have been all over the board. Not only has she become more confident in her ability to lead the team, but she's also become more consistent in her play as well. She's been able to take her game to the next level this season, which has helped the team stay in the game for longer periods of time.

For most of last season, Joya played a secondary role on the team. With the departure of veteran guard Jennifer Miller, Joya was given the opportunity to lead the team on the court. She didn't disappoint, as she quickly adjusted to her new role and began to play at a high level.

Joya's leadership at point guard was evident during the Bulldogs' loss to Missouri State this season. Joya's steady play at point guard helped the team stay in the game, but she also had four steals and four assists, including one in overtime which helped lead the Bulldogs to victory.

Joya is the only Bulldog who has played significant minutes since the beginning of the season and has a positive assist-to-turnover ratio. This is a vast improvement compared to last season when she was a major contributor to the team's success. For the last few years, Joya has been a key player in the team's success, but this year she's taken her game to a new level.

Joya's leadership has been a constant throughout the season, and she's been able to lead the team in both wins and losses. She's been the key player on the team, and her leadership is crucial to the team's success.

Joya's improvements this season have been all over the board. Not only has she become more confident in her ability to lead the team, but she's also become more consistent in her play as well. She's been able to take her game to the next level this season, which has helped the team stay in the game for longer periods of time.