If you've been listening to the political or personal commentary spewing forth from the mouths of Americans, you would probably think very little of our nation. But there is another America that I have come to know recently, the phrase "post-racial America," and I think it is important to examine it in a cultural context, having many of its own cultural values and traditions. The question I ask is, are we truly living in a post-racial America? Recently a vote was cast in the USA Today. It's the McDonald's of newspapers. It's the USA Today. It's the McDonald's of newspapers. McJobs are a necessity, but they somehow do it naturally and unconsciously. But they somehow do it naturally and unconsciously.
