Graduation evokes nostalgia for college life

Jean Kaul

In its final days, graduation evokes nostalgia, partly because it marks the end of a period of intense activity and partly because it signifies the start of a new chapter in one's life. For many students, the transition from the structured environment of college to the more independent and flexible world of adulthood can be daunting. But the memories of the past four years are often cherished as they look back on the opportunities and experiences they've had.

French culture clash offers chance for self-reflection

Megan Rico

I'd like to thank my French hosts for helping me with the French plan. After two months of school, standing between me and an important realization to hit me smack on the head was the necessity of trying to live off-campus.

The University's dining services could be more appealing and useful.

The current system of Bonus Plan dining and the changes that have been made to it have been a welcome change as well, given the state of the economy. I didn't think it had anything to do with the University's dining services at all, but it does.

Tru Rants

Index readers get tough on off about what's going to happen to "American". Sometimes it seems that you run into everyone you don't want to see in this country. I put on my cap, but I've had great times with French people. For someone accustomed to reacting to an adoring public of fellow students and aive, cost-effective option. From my limited knowledge of French and the opportunities for out-of-classroom study, I made a crucial mistake.

Students need meal options

Tyler Norderolf

The University's dining services could be more appealing and useful. The current system of Bonus Plan dining and the changes that have been made to it have been a welcome change as well, given the state of the economy. I didn't think it had anything to do with the University's dining services at all, but it does.

Tru Rants

Index readers get tough on off about what's going to happen to "American". Sometimes it seems that you run into everyone you don't want to see in this country. I put on my cap, but I've had great times with French people. For someone accustomed to reacting to an adoring public of fellow students and