The Simon Act would increase the number of U.S. students studying abroad, doubling the number of American college students studying abroad within about 10 years. The goal of the Simon Act is to increase global competitiveness by improving the understanding of business and global issues. The Act would allow universities and colleges to better prepare students for success in a global economy.

In Auditorium

The U.S. Senate introduced a new bill last week that seeks to make more opportunities available to America’s students. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved the bill, which is the Simon Act. The bill would provide a $500 million grant to universities and colleges to encourage students to study abroad. The grant would be used to improve the quality of U.S. foreign policy, which is the focus of the bill.

Senator Lincoln Chafee, a Democrat from Rhode Island, introduced the bill. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations approved the bill last week. The bill now goes to the full Senate for consideration.

According to the New York Times, the number of diploma mills was about 10,000 degrees to 131 countries. The Simon Act aims to reduce the number of diploma mills by providing a way for students to verify the quality of their degree.

Patrick Lecaque, Director of Marketing, said that the Simon Act is a “great opportunity for students to study abroad.” The Simon Act is expected to help encourage people to try to duplicate one of these diploma mills.

Diploma mills are universities that are not recognized as legitimate. Artificial degrees are used to attempt to dupe students into thinking that they have earned a degree.

Senator Lincoln Chafee said that the Simon Act is a “great opportunity for students to study abroad.” The Simon Act is expected to help encourage people to try to duplicate one of these diploma mills.

Senator Lincoln Chafee said that the Simon Act is a “great opportunity for students to study abroad.” The Simon Act is expected to help encourage people to try to duplicate one of these diploma mills.

By Dana Bruxvoort

The U.S. Senate introduced a new bill last week that seeks to make more opportunities available to America’s students. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved the bill, which is the Simon Act. The bill would provide a $500 million grant to universities and colleges to encourage students to study abroad. The grant would be used to improve the quality of U.S. foreign policy, which is the focus of the bill.

Senator Lincoln Chafee, a Democrat from Rhode Island, introduced the bill. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations approved the bill last week. The bill now goes to the full Senate for consideration.

According to the New York Times, the number of diploma mills was about 10,000 degrees to 131 countries. The Simon Act aims to reduce the number of diploma mills by providing a way for students to verify the quality of their degree.

Patrick Lecaque, Director of Marketing, said that the Simon Act is a “great opportunity for students to study abroad.” The Simon Act is expected to help encourage people to try to duplicate one of these diploma mills.

Diploma mills are universities that are not recognized as legitimate. Artificial degrees are used to attempt to dupe students into thinking that they have earned a degree.

Senator Lincoln Chafee said that the Simon Act is a “great opportunity for students to study abroad.” The Simon Act is expected to help encourage people to try to duplicate one of these diploma mills.