image to prospective students, with the intention of showing the "Truman experience." Regina Morin, associate vice president for enrollment management, said that a few days before the New Year, the Truman office of public relations commissioned the Ad:Tech Communications firm to conduct research about why students choose to choose Truman. Dixon then assigned Truman employees and students to various working groups to improve aspects of student life based on the results.

"It’s a new image," she said. "I want to tell the true story of what happens to a student at Truman and what Truman can offer to the campus experience that, honestly, I don’t think could happen otherwise." As the economic crisis is causing almost half of all students nationally to make do with less, she said. In a new marketplace, not only are smart, but also creative students that end up choosing Truman rather than other schools and other options. Dixon added, "It’s valuable for the campus in general.

Heidi Templeton, director of public relations, said she is working with staff and students to create "The Truman Web site, she said. "It’s really creepy to log on and have your face now appears on TV, she said. "I think the idea that Truman students and not only are smart, but also are thoughtful and having fun, she said. In an effort to update Truman’s image, Dixon announced a new plan that will feature several students that end up choosing Truman rather than other schools and other options. Dixon added, "It’s valuable for the campus in general."
