Early Christmas displays neglect Thanksgiving

Joan Kauf

There was a lot of discussion last week about whether or not it is appropriate to neglect the Thanksgiving holiday as you do the Christmas holiday. There are several reasons why this is a bad decision.

First, there is the obvious reason: there is no other holiday that has been celebrated for as long as Thanksgiving. It is a time for families to come together and share a meal, and it is a time for us to give thanks for all that we have. If we neglect Thanksgiving, we are overlooking a very important part of our history.

Second, there is the economic reason: if we neglect Thanksgiving, we are not going to have as many people shopping for Christmas gifts. This will mean that there will be less money spent on Christmas gifts, and this will hurt businesses.

Finally, there is the reason that it is simply wrong: we should not neglect the Thanksgiving holiday. It is a time for us to give thanks for all that we have, and it is a time for us to come together as a family.

In conclusion, there are several reasons why it is important to not neglect the Thanksgiving holiday. It is a time for families to come together and share a meal, and it is a time for us to give thanks for all that we have. We should not neglect Thanksgiving, and we should instead celebrate it as we always have.