Americans should rediscover true spirit of Christmas

Tyler Rutherford

Have you noticed how your parents won't stop talking about your adopted puppy? Of course, you may be too busy with your new job or just generally busy to notice. It seems that if you're not properly making time for your parents, they'll find meaning in something as simple as a new dog in the family. It may also get you to think about your own life and what's important.

I'm not saying that your parents are right (after all, they're your parents), but I'm also not saying that they're wrong. It's just that I think we all need to take a step back and think about what's really important.

For example, if you're having a hard time finding a job, maybe it's time to take a look at your priorities. Are you really spending your time on something that really matters to you? Or are you just spending your time on something that makes you feel better, even if it's just for a little while?

Of course, it's hard to balance everything, but I think it's important to try. It might just make you feel better in the long run.

So, next time you're having a hard time finding a job, take a step back and think about what's really important. Maybe it's time to make a change. And maybe it's time to take a look at your priorities.

What do you think?

Zach Vicars

Christmas in America has been marred by a good-natured spreading of a well-intended message.

It seems that we're all supposed to be giving, but the problem is that we're not giving to the right people.

For example, if you're giving to the Salvation Army, you're giving to the people who need it the most. But if you're giving to a sorority or fraternity, you're giving to the people who don't need it as much.

So, what do you say? Are you giving to the right people?

FYI, I'm not saying that you're doing anything wrong. I'm just saying that it's important to think about what you're giving to and who you're giving it to.

What do you think?

Tyne Morey Ford

First of all, let's talk about the fact that the majority of people in this country are getting Christmas presents from one another. This is not a bad thing, but it's important to remember that this is just a holiday tradition.

For example, if you're giving a gift to your parents, you're giving to the people who love and support you. But if you're giving a gift to your peers, you're giving to the people who might not even like you.

So, what do you say? Are you giving to the right people?

FYI, I'm not saying that you're doing anything wrong. I'm just saying that it's important to think about what you're giving to and who you're giving it to.

What do you think?

Whitney Blake

in the birth of Jesus are bound to draw us way back to the holiday we once knew. And in doing so, we may be able to remember the true meaning of Christmas.

For example, if you're giving a gift to your parents, you're giving to the people who love and support you. But if you're giving a gift to your peers, you're giving to the people who might not even like you.

So, what do you say? Are you giving to the right people?

FYI, I'm not saying that you're doing anything wrong. I'm just saying that it's important to think about what you're giving to and who you're giving it to.

What do you think?

Molly Stokes

Americans should rediscover true spirit of Christmas.

It seems like every year, we're all supposed to be giving. But the problem is that we're not giving to the right people.

For example, if you're giving to the Salvation Army, you're giving to the people who need it the most. But if you're giving to a sorority or fraternity, you're giving to the people who don't need it as much.

So, what do you say? Are you giving to the right people?

FYI, I'm not saying that you're doing anything wrong. I'm just saying that it's important to think about what you're giving to and who you're giving it to.

What do you think?

December 9, 2008

Web Poll

Have you done any holiday gift buying yet?

Yes, some of it: 33%

Yes, all of it: 67%

No, not yet: 42%

This week's question:

Have you ordered your holiday travel plans already?

Vote online at tamuagg.com