Televisioning meetings provides benefits

Oh, how times have changed. In my high school days, a student body was more apt to find its information through the medium of radio. It was sometimes a little difficult to find out the facts of the case on the latest political campaign or even what was happening to a student body that you might be interested in. But the arrival of television and the widespread availability of cable has turned this all around.

It is almost impossible to get as much information from a student body as one could from the traditional print media.

The first reform point that I would like to propose is that student government agencies should be provided with television access. This would allow them to have a greater voice in their own affairs.

Another point that I would like to make is that student government agencies would be able to have a greater say in their own affairs. This would allow them to have a greater voice in their own affairs.

Lastly, I would like to say that student government agencies should be provided with television access. This would allow them to have a greater voice in their own affairs.