Filmmakers Club broadens focus

BY CHARLOTTE KOEDAN

Sophomore Dave Turner gave up in Kolbe-Ann and worked at Chick-fil-A. Finally, at 4 p.m., he said he'd be up to volunteer like usual.

With a mind to bring more international films to Kirksville, Filmmakers Club adviser Todd Kuhns said he'd love to affiliate like usual.

"I was hoping that we could make more contact with Alex for a project together. We're planning to help her out with some film work and maybe coordinate some events as well," Kuhns said.

Recently, Filmmakers Club members screened "4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days," an international film, and turned to "The Diving Bell and the Butterfly," a French film, amongst others for their upcoming screenings.

Since 2006, the club has aimed to expand its mission to include visiting international films and showcasing them to the Kirksville community.

"We're not sure exactly how many international films we've had," said immersion student Trevor Smidt. "But we're definitely proud of the fact that we've come so far and that we're taking the time to learn more about these films.

The club has worked hard to increase the number of international films they show, and they are proud of the progress they have made. They are excited to continue to grow and learn more about international cinema.

Filmmakers Club adviser Todd Kuhns said, "We've had the opportunity to showcase a variety of international films, and we are proud of the progress we've made. We want to continue to expand our mission and bring even more international films to Kirksville."

The club is grateful for the support of the community and looks forward to continuing to bring the world to Kirksville. They are excited to see how their mission will continue to grow and to bring even more international films to the community in the future.

Films cross national, cultural borders

BY PAUL BECHTOL

It might be worth the time and a trip to attend the upcoming International Film Festival at the University of South Carolina in Columbia, S.C.

The Tournées Festival has had six to eight films screened at the festival and people are ready to go. The films are made for adults and they have been shown at the festival since 2006.

"I think people are ready to go," said immersion student Trevor Smidt. "We've been shown to a variety of international films, and we are ready to continue to bring the world to Kirksville."

The festival is a great opportunity to expand your cultural horizons. You can see a variety of films from different countries, and you can learn about different cultures and their film industries.

The festival is held on October 1st and 2nd, and admission is free for students with student ID. The films will be shown at the University of South Carolina in Columbia, S.C.

The festival is open to everyone, and there are no age restrictions. The films are made for adults, but they are appropriate for all ages.

Filmmakers Club adviser Todd Kuhns said, "We're excited to bring more international films to Kirksville. They are a great opportunity to expand our cultural horizons and learn about different cultures and their film industries."
