Wal-Mart pulls local papers

New corporate policy removes local publications from entryway

BY SARAH SCOTT
staff reporter

For Truman students, Wal-Mart is more than a local paper carrier—it’s a destination.

Retailing the latest fashions and offering amazing deals, Wal-Mart might seem something different. According to corporate policy, the store’s local paper, the Kirksville Index, will no longer be distributed at Wal-Mart.

The Index carries articles about Wal-Mart specials, upcoming events in the area, and local retailers. If the newspaper were to be removed from the store, consumers would have fewer opportunities to learn about events and local retailers.

The alternative way a property can be nominated is to give the power to nominate to the landowner. If the landowner wanted to modify a historic building, he or she would need to obtain a certificate of appropriateness.

Brad Selby, Kirksville’s Codes and Planning Director, said those who try to participate in the nominate process must have an understanding of the historical significance of the property. He said the state-suggested ordinance requires a property owner to have an understanding of the property. The owner must then make an application to the Historic Preservation Commission.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and it still would go through the same hearing process. The Historic Preservation Commission will determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. Selby said the county and city Planning Committees will need to review the case.

He said the county and city Planning Committees will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and is located in a county, the county Planning Commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

The commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and is located in a county, the county Planning Commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

Property owners might have say in historical value

BY AMANDA GOESER
staff reporter

The Historic Preservation Commission is drafting an ordinance that will have the property owners decide if their holdings become historic.

He said the ordinance requires the Historic Preservation Commission to obtain a certificate of appropriateness. He said those who try to participate in the nominate process must have an understanding of the historical significance of the property. He said the state-suggested ordinance requires a property owner to have an understanding of the property.

He said the county and city Planning Committees will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and is located in a county, the county Planning Commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and is located in a county, the county Planning Commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and is located in a county, the county Planning Commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.

If a property is on the National Register of Historic Places and is located in a county, the county Planning Commission will need to determine if the property meets the criteria or the standards to be a historic property. The county Planning Commission will need to review the case if the property is on the National Register of Historic Places.