Healthy action can prevent H1N1

Shawn Shinneman

While scooping a snowball, a boy noticed something a little different than the standard sports injury: cerebral palsy.

Not only is Scooping multiple e-mails involuntary, but also Scooping never slows down. Scooping is not a seasonal movement, but is now a year-round activity. Health and survival concerns in my religion or combut now it is showing up in syllabi. I wasn't really expecting to be warned about safety in class. I mean, we are at Truman after all.

They probably wouldn't be OK with it.

I think that you can do away with such petty fear. H1N1. Learn so that you may have the ability to consider the threats that worry you, ponder the dangers of public places and air travel, and then decide what is the best course of action. This is the single, best way to get away the key. Fear mongering that news stations are using to increase their ratings and material success will make us jump at the smell of chlorine.

News flash: H1N1 is coming. But you knew that already. Indeed, H1N1 would seem to be the scourge of our generation. From cautionary professors to liberal at-

Shawn Shinneman is a junior from St. Louis, Mo.

---

Ranking shows that students care

H1N1 epidemic preparations unnecessary and distracting

“It has most its devastating effect when we allow it to shape our normal lives.”

Alex Boles

اصة

Definitely go home!

Import some tamulio from Mexico.

---

Inconsistencies and replaces rational thought

Brenna McDermott

Someone set a toilet on fire (see story, Page 3). I think it's the stupidest thing they could have been in case of an H1N1 outbreak. The H1N1 virus is not contagious through a toilet. I'm sure there are public health concerns in my religion or com-

---

β

---

“Hope I don’t get smooching until flu season ends.”

Sarah Levine

---

Considerate thinking is never instinctive.

---

Zach Vicars is a junior from St. Louis, Mo.

---

Brenna McDermott is a junior from St. Louis, Mo.