Levels of desires in humans create diverse personalities

BY ELIZABETH NECKA

While hookup culture might still be rampant on our campus, it’s important to realize that we are a diverse group of people with varying desires. Many college students may have different desires when it comes to relationships or even just social wishes. It can be hard to find a balance between the two.

Although each human exhibits all of these desires, we present ourselves to varying degrees which separate us as individuals. Although most of us want each other’s desires to a moderate degree — creating a, well, balance — we still have our own separate desires. If we want to be more unselfish, we can.

Desires are personal, and whether or not one has a certain desire is up to them. Some people may have a desire to be more unselfish, while others may desire more independence. It’s important to understand that desires are personal, and everyone is different.

In any relationship, it’s important to be honest about your desires and to work together as a team to make it work. If one person’s desires are not met, then it’s important to communicate and work together to find a solution. It’s important to understand that desires are personal, and everyone is different.

In any relationship, it’s important to be honest about your desires and to work together as a team to make it work. If one person’s desires are not met, then it’s important to communicate and work together to find a solution. It’s important to understand that desires are personal, and everyone is different.