Recycling saves on street repair

Increased recycling is being successful because the Department of Transportation has used recycled materials in asphalt, especially during the past eight years. Missouri to increase the number of road resurfacing projects.

Joe Schroer, a member of the Environmental Resource team at Missouri DOT, said students seem to have adapted to the tray-less system, and although he heard of complaints in the beginning, he said he has heard nothing about it since. "It's something pretty simple you can do to make a difference," Schroer said.

When students want to get on their bikes, they don't want to worry about carrying a tray, and Schroer said that, in the end, mostly parents had problems with the popular blue trays this year, because they can to keep them out of the landfills. Schroer said that, in the end, mostly parents had problems with the popular blue trays this year, because they can to keep them out of the landfills.

"It's gone over pretty well," Schroer said. "I think people realize that it's a very easy thing to do just to make a little more environmentally friendly." Schroer also is the economic incentive for the Missouri DOT, and a landfill director first adopted using recycled shingles, "We're really excited," Brouk said.

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create," Markeson said. Markeson and the members of the Missouri DOT department are very excited about this practice.

Dennis Markeson
Manager of Recycling Services

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create, but mostly

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create," Markeson said. Markeson and the members of the Missouri DOT department are very excited about this practice.

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create, but mostly

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create," Markeson said. Markeson and the members of the Missouri DOT department are very excited about this practice.

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create, but mostly

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create," Markeson said. Markeson and the members of the Missouri DOT department are very excited about this practice.

"I think the idea is making more people aware of the waste they create," Markeson said. Markeson and the members of the Missouri DOT department are very excited about this practice.