Jewelry store sells history

Gardner-Collier Jewelry Store on The Square has been family-owned for the past 86 years. Carol Collier has pioneered custom jewelry making and designing for the store.

“It’s very easy to identify gems incorrectly,” she said. “He wanted to try them on, and he had to be caught in time.”

When Bruce and Carol bought the store in 1978, the store moved its focus from selling jewelry to gemology. Carol said she was interested in gemology because it was a way to identify precious stones. After graduating from the Gemological Institute of America and becoming a gemologist, she started working at the store.

Carol said the jewelry store has been very successful. “It’s really a good price on a diamond, you ought to sell it,” she said. “But it’s a really good price on a diamond, you ought to sell it.”

For more than 22 years.

The band Sniffer Chief played fast and caused the audience to want to bang their heads. The Creepers did a great job with the instrumentals, and the music was a perfect setting for a rock show. Sniffer Chief was the first band to take the stage, and they played with a lot of energy and excitement.

The Creepers were a fantastic band and should take their music to the next level. All of their songs had never been practiced. Crifo said the band usually decides what to play only nights before the show. But there were aspects of the performance that needed work. There were moments of the song that reminded the audience of an unfinished basement: A perfect setting for a rock show. Sniffer Chief did not utilize their vast amount of talent, but they certainly have the potential to go onto bigger things.
