Supreme Court lifts ban on sex offenders

Two Kirksville restaurants closed their doors for the final time last weekend.

David Joyner, former general manager of the Manhattan Café and Bakery, said Sunday was its last day of business.

“It wasn’t really a surprise,” Joyner said. “The owners live in Quincy, and they were looking to move back to Quincy where they are from. They owned the Manhattan, Quincy, Ill., and Kirksville store.

“They were thinking they’d sell us, and they could not find a buyer, so they’d hoped, so they went ahead and closed down. As far as I know they’re going to clean out the stores and move out.”

“I believe that they will close new ownership, and my guess is it will be within a couple of weeks to a couple of months,” Joyner said. “We’re not for sale, but I know right now Papa John’s Corporate is offering a lot of incentives to new investors. I can’t see investors passing those up. “I think that’s probably a pretty fair estimate. It’s almost as though someone I know has died.”

The 2008 law requires convicted sex offenders in Adair County, nine of whom have been classified as unmapped, to label their houses on Halloween and to post a sign that reads, “No candy or treats on Halloween,” a house on which this law is considered a misdeemeanor and can result in one year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Two sex offenders challenged the law after they were charged for failing to label their houses and post signs, despite being convicted before the two laws had come into effect.

Several other sex offenders in Adair County were on notice for violating the two laws. They were given the opportunity to leave the ruling.

There are 64 known sex offenders in Adair County, six of whom have been classified as unmapped.

Parents should just keep track of the register and notify the sheriff of any suspicious behavior and steer themselves away from the known houses. “Parents should just keep track of the register and notify the sheriff of any suspicious behavior and steer themselves away from the known houses,” Williams said.

A closed sign was taped to the door of Manhattan Café and Bakery Saturday.
