Talking About Our Generation:
Morning after pill doesn’t solve sprout problems

By Anna M. Geary

Walking up in Panama City Beach, Fla., this weekend to see "The Ex," I was not prepared for the sheer volume of honking and loud music that would still be lingering in my eardrums, a stranger noise to me that I could not see in the street below as part of the “Pla-7 Plus” reality. Everyone in the theater was dressed in flared-out denim, crimson neckties and white t-shirts. Sadly, some of them had no heads. Sunday night’s hit, "The Ex," is playing to the packed theaters and multiplexes nationwide instead of testing it on my local college campus. Two or three times a week, I walk through my door of my dorm while someone is playing "The Ex" without a second thought. It is the perfect way to begin or end your day. You can listen to it before your morning class or after your evening class and not even notice that you are listening to it. You can’t help but laugh at the dialog and the situations in the movie. You can’t help but cry at the heartwarming moments and the sweet moments. You can’t help but think about the message of the movie and how it relates to your own life and how it relates to others. It is a perfect movie for everyone. It is a perfect movie for everyone because even more than that, this movie became "enlightening" and made us want to better the way we think and act.

The movie is about a young couple named Steve and Emily who just found out that they are going to have a baby. They are both very excited about the news and they are both very concerned about the future of their baby. They are both very worried about the future of their baby’s life and they are both very worried about the future of the world. They are both very worried about the future of the world because they both want to make the world a better place for their baby and they both want to make the world a better place for their children.
