Adoption specialist Shelley Wells (left) and Missy Decker (right), manager of the Adair County Humane Society, said they have seen their share of sad stories with the animals that arrive, but they also have a wall of photos of animals who have found loving homes.

Shannon Miller/AH

Animals find home with locals

BY SHARON WALTER Staff reporter

Squirrelfest displays variety of talents

BY RUSSELL BECKMAN Reporter

If you were walking through the Shadow Bluff Hills of the oversaturated and overwatered waist-high cornfields of one of the farms playing such a regional band called Squirlamorph, you might hear that the concert was really encouraging because we really do have a great community. This is the positive side to every day, I am really glad that we have people here who make it happen and we deserve to have them in our lives. These stories happen every day.

Miss Decker said the shelter has many volunteers from the University who walk the animals and give them attention. "The hardest thing for me is watching the animals go out the door for the last time. You can see how they are treated with a friend on a walk and they are much more relaxed when they are in the shelter's care quietly distinct. Animals get so excited for the volunteers who are there every day, such as the volunteer who says the dogs "are better than they have ever been in their lives."

Squirrelfest displays variety of talents

BY RUSSELL BECKMAN Reporter

The band was talented, but the most impressive thing about This is Energy was the amount of liveliness they possessed. They chose not to outplay on the stage like the other bands and instead the audience joined them in their dancing, clapping and singing along with the music.

"The band was talented, but the most impressive thing about This is Energy was the amount of liveliness they possessed. They chose not to outplay on the stage like the other bands and instead the audience joined them in their dancing, clapping and singing along with the music."

The last band to play was This is Energy. After This is Energy, unfortunately, three of the five members were unable to make it to the concert. Only two of them actually played. However, they were able to play an encore, "A Song for a Happy Day." This was a beautiful song that seemed to fit in with the rest of the concert. When they finished playing, the audience really enjoyed it. The lyrics were uplifting and the liveliness they possessed. They were able to get up and dance, and they ended up playing a song that they had never played before. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.

The second band to play was Victory Sessions. This band played mostly alternative rock and power-pop music. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.

The third band to play was This is Energy. After this, unfortunately, three of the five members were unable to make it to the concert. Only two of them actually played. However, they were able to play an encore, "A Song for a Happy Day." This was a beautiful song that seemed to fit in with the rest of the concert. When they finished playing, the audience really enjoyed it. The lyrics were uplifting and the liveliness they possessed. They were able to get up and dance, and they ended up playing a song that they had never played before. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.

The fourth band to play was This is Energy. After this, unfortunately, three of the five members were unable to make it to the concert. Only two of them actually played. However, they were able to play an encore, "A Song for a Happy Day." This was a beautiful song that seemed to fit in with the rest of the concert. When they finished playing, the audience really enjoyed it. The lyrics were uplifting and the liveliness they possessed. They were able to get up and dance, and they ended up playing a song that they had never played before. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.

The fifth band to play was This is Energy. After this, unfortunately, three of the five members were unable to make it to the concert. Only two of them actually played. However, they were able to play an encore, "A Song for a Happy Day." This was a beautiful song that seemed to fit in with the rest of the concert. When they finished playing, the audience really enjoyed it. The lyrics were uplifting and the liveliness they possessed. They were able to get up and dance, and they ended up playing a song that they had never played before. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.

The sixth band to play was This is Energy. After this, unfortunately, three of the five members were unable to make it to the concert. Only two of them actually played. However, they were able to play an encore, "A Song for a Happy Day." This was a beautiful song that seemed to fit in with the rest of the concert. When they finished playing, the audience really enjoyed it. The lyrics were uplifting and the liveliness they possessed. They were able to get up and dance, and they ended up playing a song that they had never played before. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.

The seventh band to play was This is Energy. After this, unfortunately, three of the five members were unable to make it to the concert. Only two of them actually played. However, they were able to play an encore, "A Song for a Happy Day." This was a beautiful song that seemed to fit in with the rest of the concert. When they finished playing, the audience really enjoyed it. The lyrics were uplifting and the liveliness they possessed. They were able to get up and dance, and they ended up playing a song that they had never played before. This was a really great surprise for the audience and they were very happy with the performance. They played a couple of songs, but instead of going on to the next song, They spent much further.