I got a lot of letters initially. I was getting upwards of 100 a day, and I was like "Wow, this could be something people use." Now it's mostly anywhere from two to five a day, but it's still a steady trickle.

Alex Boles
Junior

Unwritten Letters

Letters from students of the style of Frank Warren's 'PostSecret'

Continued from Page 9
"It's tough to explain it because it's a community building thing. It's not just about raising money for a certain cause or a sickness, but it's really if you study it and take it seriously, it's a genuine cause on the Web site, that I will join and have people who are interested. It isn't a big thing, but if you include something that gives people some purpose, I'm sure it would be able to get it out there.

We decided to have this letter campaign because I know, in the past, you want to do something when you first set out to do this?

We'll see how that goes. I decided to do it to see if we could get other people involved, and I think we have about 200 letters so far. We've had about 20 people who wrote letters, and about 100 people have read the letters. So we have about 250 people involved in this project. It's really important to me to get people involved in this project.

We've had a lot of feedback from people who have written letters, and I think that's really important. It's important to me to get people involved in this project. It's really important to me to get people involved in this project.

We've had a lot of feedback from people who have written letters, and I think that's really important. It's important to me to get people involved in this project.