Senator student senate passes resolution Sunday that supports combining elements of ENG 190 and COMM 170 for a freshman seminar.

All new incoming students would be required to take the class their first semester at Truman. This would provide first-time students an introduction to writing and communication at a college level, but it would also provide a more connected experience for students.

Sen. Jarrett Tomlinson said that he voted in favor of changing the curriculum and a number of potential benefits for students if this new curriculum is implemented, and that he thought that this could be very effective. He said there are multiple reasons for introducing a section of human body awareness in English and Communication.

Senior student senator Charles Tomlinson said he was concerned about the potential benefits for this new curriculum is implemented, and that he thought that this could be very effective. He said there are multiple reasons for introducing a section of human body awareness in English and Communication.

"The class is not intended to teach speaking or writing," Tomlinson said. "It is intended to provide speaking and writing experience and to provide the feedback of revisionary processes."

Tomlinson said he did not think that this class would be harder than WACT 190 for international students. He said he thinks most students will be comfortable in this class and that the faculty will be willing to help any student who had difficulties, depending on what kind of problems the student is having. "I don’t have that hope that Truman can do that."
