CODY SUMTER, student representative to the board of governors, said he saw no reason why Missouri four-year public colleges would have to agree to a tuition freeze.

"There's nowhere to cut unless we go straight into faculty," Sumter said. "We will either have to make up that money, or cut places or a combination of both."