Interdisciplinary studies rise in popularity

Study by the Chronicle of Higher Education highlights new popular minors

BY DANA BRUXVOORT

Student Senate rejects slate for student representative to Board of Governors, November deadline looming

BY COLETT LINTON

The selection process for a new student representative to the Board of Governors continues after Student Senate rejected the slate presented by the Kansas Student Government on Oct. 19, according to the organization’s constitution.

A student committee composed of current student senators, former Student Senate presidents and Student Senate president-elect Jeffrey Thangis, student senator Andrew Crews and freshman George Allan Jr. met to choose candidates for the position in the fall semester. After the selection process, the committee presented a slate to the Student Senate, which then decided to reject the slate on Oct. 19.

After Student Senate rejected the slate Sunday, it was sent back to the selection committee for review. The committee, which is made up of 11 students from a variety of prominent campus organizations, chose not to change the slate. Then, the original slate was sent back to Student Senate to vote on the slate, which it did on Sunday, according to The 11 applicants were a major in-disciplinary study pursued by Truman students.

whether or not we were to go major.

and coming minors.

are attempting something that is to the public and students of Student Senate, though that is not a requirement to apply for the student representative position. Anyone on campus was able to apply for a representative to the Board of Governors, but we try to find a diverse [of] group of people to compete. So someone can be a freshman, a junior, a president and member of the student rep- resentative team, and the results will reflect the diversity and interests of the campus.

and is glad she decided on a computational work, but she still

The biggest challenges we are not as good as the computer work, but the cultural context and handi-we will continue to grow.

Not everyone wants to

“it certainly looks like there’s
city and they’re also selected, in

even if you’re in some minority of students’ interest,” Rick-on the Nov. 1 deadline for a slate to be presented to the Board of Governors and hopes it will ate for Truman and hopes it will

ary studies as mission-appropri-

fessor Kevin Porter.

 Sedrick said.

By Dana Bruxvoort

Staff Reporter

George Adam Crews King

that education is a key area in emerging disciplines science serv-health information, sustainability, public health and computer

The 11 applicants were a major inter-than just whether they would

are all similar to the emerging disciplinary sciences. The Chronicle of Higher Education iden-ticated as up

further research. Seniors ds and coming minors.

mathematics, biology and the director of inter-by combining a computer science and math.

not necessarily true in this case.

in biology experiments.

the people with knowledge and ex-

and the amount of data life, the problems at by anyone. You’re going to need some istry. However, it’s not status.

have that diversity,” Kelrick interdisciplinary studies as mission-appropri-in the future.

interdisciplinary major by combining original slate of three applicants Sunday.

If you have any questions or concerns, contact jmg6242@truman.edu.

and 30 interdisciplinary studies and three of the candidates that I thought we could represent the student body in the best

At that time, I’m not sure that the

I could think of was to combine a com-were not necessarily the best, what they’re trying to do repre-

On campus, anyone was able to apply for a representative to the Board of Governors, but we try to find an diverse [of] group of people to compete. So someone can be a freshman, a junior, a president and member of the student representative team, and the results will reflect the diversity and interests of the campus.

The 11 applicants were a major in-

than just whether they would

are attempting something that is

the people with knowledge and ex-

the big picture, the more you have this

There is a Nov. 1 deadline for a slate to be presented to the Board of Governors and hopes it will

ate for Truman and hopes it will

ary studies as mission-appropri-

fessor Kevin Porter.

Not everyone wants to

“it certainly looks like there’s
city and they’re also selected, in

even if you’re in some minority of students’ interest,” Rick-

on the Nov. 1 deadline for a slate to be presented to the Board of Governors and hopes it will

ate for Truman and hopes it will

ary studies as mission-appropri-

fessor Kevin Porter.

Students reject slate for student representative to Board of Governors, November deadline looming

The selection process for a new student representative to the Board of Governors continues after Student Senate rejected the slate presented by the Kansas Student Government on Oct. 19, according to the organization’s constitution.

A student committee composed of current student senators, former Student Senate presidents and Student Senate president-elect Jeffrey Thangis, student senator Andrew Crews and freshman George Allan Jr. met to choose candidates for the position in the fall semester. After the selection process, the committee presented a slate to the Student Senate, which then decided to reject the slate on Oct. 19.

After Student Senate rejected the slate Sunday, it was sent back to the selection committee for review. The committee, which is made up of 11 students from a variety of prominent campus organizations, chose not to change the slate. Then, the original slate was sent back to Student Senate to vote on the slate, which it did on Sunday, according to the big picture, the more you have this

There is a Nov. 1 deadline for a slate to be presented to the Board of Governors and hopes it will

ate for Truman and hopes it will

ary studies as mission-appropri-

fessor Kevin Porter.

Not everyone wants to

“it certainly looks like there’s
city and they’re also selected, in

even if you’re in some minority of students’ interest,” Rick-

on the Nov. 1 deadline for a slate to be presented to the Board of Governors and hopes it will

ate for Truman and hopes it will

ary studies as mission-appropri-

fessor Kevin Porter.

Students reject slate for student representative to Board of Governors, November deadline looming

The selection process for a new student representative to the Board of Governors continues after Student Senate rejected the slate presented by the Kansas Student Government on Oct. 19, according to the organization’s constitution.

A student committee composed of current student senators, former Student Senate presidents and Student Senate president-elect Jeffrey Thangis, student senator Andrew Crews and freshman George Allan Jr. met to choose candidates for the position in the fall semester. After the selection process, the committee presented a slate to the Student Senate, which then decided to reject the slate on Oct. 19.

After Student Senate rejected the slate Sunday, it was sent back to the selection committee for review. The committee, which is made up of 11 students from a variety of prominent campus organizations, chose not to change the slate. Then, the original slate was sent back to Student Senate to vote on the slate, which it did on Sunday, according to