Produce shortage should lead to local foods increase

Connor Riley

Once upon a time, there was an Al-Yoo or Al-Mat. You could not walk on these streets, buy a year’s supply of macaroni and cheese, etc. Everything was given locally, either by yourself or by your near neighbors, you would hardly think of buying vegetables and fruits during summer and fall. This was due to the fact that the climate was too cold and we simply couldn’t pick any produce during winter.

We all have one or two favorite YouTube videos, whether it be “Charlie Bit My Finger” or “The Evolution of Dance.” There is always a video that makes us laugh or smile, which makes it enjoyable and relaxing to watch. This is why YouTube is recommended by our friends and mostly includes some comedic content that is supposed to make us laugh. However, great parody videos have the potential to be more than a place to get a good laugh or watch alone. Videos like this are not only wildly-powering and have a wide-reaching audience, but are a treasure trove of precious images that are instantly useful to those who want to research our past history. For example, the pictures allow us to see the culprit of the1917 Egyptian massacre because people didn’t want to face reality beforehand and avoid certain scenes. Again, the products of numerous grapes and vines are quite a treat. Here we are. Now we just give thanks to YouTube and show appreciation for the people who made that possible.

With a click of a mouse, we may even be able to go to the streets of the year 2050, and see how the society of the future will be. Whether you’re into science fiction or history, you can find videos on most important events. In the case of famous personalities, we may be able to learn how they lived and why they were successful. Even if you can’t find的历史， you can still learn about how the world would be different if we didn’t have the YouTube.

Next time you're on YouTube, try to search for a video or topic that has no comment or rating. There are millions of videos on YouTube, and you can find something of interest. But you need to go through them to find the best video.

Connor Riley is a junior political science major from St. Louis, Mo.,

YouTube offers humor but lacks important substance

Bryce Oyama

Seriously, are there not enough ‘cute baby doing verb’ or musical parody videos that already exist on YouTube? We should not continue to ignore the videos that can give us a deeper insight into the world that exists around us.

Videos are increasingly effective teaching tools. Most people would argue that the world learns better (or through any other medium). There are a large number of videos that serve educational purposes, which can be used in any way on any topic and click is needed to watch. The videos can serve as an educational tool that has been given up to us.

Bryce Oyama is a junior political science major from Jefferson City, Mo.

Women must become more politically active

Hannah Douglas

Back when, some Kirkville citizens were not able to do the things that we take for granted today. They were physically incapable of exercising their right to vote. They were physically incapable of exercising their right to vote.

Today, women are welcome in the political sphere. They can even run for office, but, despite all the history, all the women’s rights movements and even women’s suffrage, not many women take advantage of the right available to them, especially in Kirkville. Even though women are no longer running for City Council and president of French Beauty McCain, some decided to run when they heard about the situation.

Kirkville isn’t close to this trend. The U.S. presidential elections are not even in Kirkville, but in Illinois. There is a trend of women voting. Women are often more interested in politics than men are. This is why there are more women running for political office.

The percentage of women in both political parties annually has decreased for the last few years. From 17% in 2010 to 20% in the last election, according to a Pew poll, the number is down. If women were to run for office, they would need to increase their political engagement. However, as women gain the right to vote, they become interested in political issues. They want to know what’s going on in their community, in their state, and in the rest of the world.

Hannah Douglas is a senior communication major from Springfield, Ill.

Around the Quad

What is your favorite YouTube video?

Unedited:

Drew Van Boven alumnae

Drum Can’t Handle Me Indian Style, Eminem Drum and it is not like him

Crystal Gunks alumnae

"Hannah, I’m the boss."

Jessica Schmittgen grad student

"Frat party." I’m not sure who put me in a good mood.

"Lucky Giddel: She interprets Lady Gaga lyrics. It’s really entertaining.”

Ashley Welch sophomore

Unedited:

Hannah Douglas is a senior communication major from Springfield, Ill.