MUSIC | EIC weighs in on favorite albums of 2016

It wasn't just a new album, it was an entirely new sound for Childish Gambino. It was a funk album that followed two albums and a handful of EPs and mixtapes full of mostly rap music. And it wasn't just funk music — it was nostalgic. It sounds like how I imagine the 1970s sounded — like early Prince, like Sly and the Family Stone. It hearkens back to an era that, though I might be far removed from it, I feel like I can grasp. I feel like I understand the feelings a 22-year-old like me might have felt during that time when they first heard music that sounded like this.

Where we have an album full of different styles and genres morphing in and out of one another in "Coloring Book," we have an album that is a complete departure from the norm in "Awaken, My Love!" And I love that this is some of the music I had the pleasure of listening to during 2016. I continue listening to it frequently now, and I'll likely keep it in my rotation for years to come. As much as I'll always enjoy the releases that sound like more of the same great music from artists I love, such as "RTJ3" and "Holy Ghost," I'll enjoy the surprises even more. I hope that a few more artists pull a fast one on me during 2017.

TOP 5 Podcasts To Listen To During Study Breaks

1

Overinvested. Of all the pop culture review podcasts out there, this is one of the best. Hosts Gavia Baker-Whitelaw and Morgan Leigh Davies cover everything from cult classics like "American Psycho" to blockbusters like "Batman v Superman." The hosts bring very different perspectives to the table and always provide new ways to look at old favorite movies.

2

Lore. In this creepy nonfiction podcast, horror writer Aaron Mahnke describes some of the most unsettling urban legends and unsolved crimes he's encountered while conducting research for his novels. These stories will keep you wide awake during any long drive.

3

The Worst Bestsellers. If you're looking for something lighthearted to listen to while multitasking, this is your podcast. Kait and Renata, a former bookseller and librarian, have made it their mission to "read bad books so you don't have to." Highlights include episodes covering "Fifty Shades of Grey" and the "Animorphs" series.

4

Pacific Northwest Stories puts out some of the best auditory entertainment you'll ever feed into your ears. "The Black Tapes Podcast" follows a classic horror monster-of-the-week formula, while its companion, "Tanis," is a must for any sci-fi lover or conspiracy theorist.

5

Stuff You Missed in History Class. This podcast is appropriate for all ages, making it good for family trips or classroom usage. Hosts Tracy V. Wilson and Holly Frey set out to prove history is neither stuffy nor boring with research on topics such as incompetent pirates and cross-dressing stage-coach drivers.
