Top: Service and social sorority Tau Lambda Sigma hosted a Q&A session for middle and high school aged girls in the community to ask questions during Girl Love Week promoting feminism on campus.

Left: Members in the audience were each given a slip of paper to write questions on which were all put into an envelope, read one by one and answered by different members of the TLS panel to preserve anonymity. Questions such as "How has your sense of identity changed since middle school?" and "If you could tell 15-year-old you something, what would it be?" among others were asked.

Bottom: Members of the TLS panel discussed their own personal experiences as women, ranging from body image issues, discrimination based on their sexual orientation and growing up in a single parent household.
