I was dismayed to read fem- In conclusion, good opinionated views are no longer welcome in the Index. I am pledged never to shop at Wal-Mart again. Here are my reasons.

I have always enjoyed shopping at Wal-Mart. Back in the old days, before they started to stock supermarkets in the 1960s and 1970s, Wal-Mart was a small discount store. I used to go there and buy items. Now, they are a giant with 1.3 million employees. Currently, they have 1.3 million employees. I like to shop for my needs at Wal-Mart because they have everything I need. They have a wide variety of items, and the prices are low. I also like the fact that they have a lot of sales and discounts.

I have learned more about the company and its practices, but I always ignored it. I was proud of my company’s practices and I never thought about them. But now, I have decided to stop shopping at Wal-Mart because they are not treating their employees properly. They are only interested in profits and not in the well-being of their employees. They are exploit- ing their humanity, who will suffer?

Laws are now in place to protect stock the new Wal-Mart, which is a huge store. This store has over 1,000 employees, and it is a lot of money. They are suffering from the exploitation of Wal-Mart. They are not being treated fairly. They are not being paid what they deserve, and they are not being given the benefits that they deserve.

In addition to the jobs, they buy. Is it our choice of what we want to buy? Is it our choice of what we want to wear? I think we should be able to choose what we want to buy and wear. We should be able to make our own decisions, not have someone else tell us what to buy and wear.

Speaking of labor, another issue that is important to me is the treatment of workers. I have heard stories of workers being exploited and not being paid for overtime and not being given rest breaks. I think these are important issues and need to be addressed.

Recently, I was reading an article about Wal-Mart and their labor practices. The article mentioned that Wal-Mart is a giant company and that they have 1.3 million employees. They are a huge company and they have a lot of power. However, I think it is important to hold companies like this accountable. They should be held accountable for their actions and practices.

To write so McCarthy-like and valiantly trying to raise all semester. Even unconsciously, works from a position of strength. For example, women are more likely to bring African-American students to university. If Christianity has little to do with the social study of biology, then I don’t think it is a valid argument. The scientific community was already aware of the evolution. And the instructor must not at least teach the unit on evolution. And why would it want to? We come to the liberal arts university to challenge our assumptions. The most challenging ideas are often those that are most controversial.
