The Recruit fails mission

Hagen goes for the kill.

Just once it would be nice to see a movie that does not try to outsmart the audience with a series of silly and obvious traps. “The Recruit” falls into a suspenseful thriller but fails to outdo the best of its genre.

The film, which stars Al Pacino and Robin Williams, is about a young MIT graduate who is recruited by the CIA to work for the agency’s strategic intelligence unit. The CIA has been under investigation by Congress, and Clayton, a recent MIT graduate, is offered a job as a CIA analyst. Clayton, who is a brilliant student, accepts the job and begins to work for the CIA.

Unfortunately for “The Recruit,” the average viewer is smart enough to figure [it out].
